Eleven groups of female oral contraceptive users have been studied to examine the effects of three sex hormones on the growth of mammary tumors. The study population consisted of families of patients with breast cancer and families of patients without cancer. All patients were premenopausal. Hormone replacement therapy after menopause is being compared to no hormone replacement therapy. The patients will be followed for another five years, with repeated biopsies of growing tumors and lymph nodes, biopsies of breasts and submandibular glands, mammograms, and physical exams. After this period of time a final analysis of the data will be made. The estrogen content of breast tissue has been measured by a new assay technique. The assay measures the hydroxytamoxifen bound to DNA and is more closely related to the true intracellular concentration of estradiol. Run Wild (The Choir album) Run Wild is the second studio album released by British folk band The Choir. This invention relates to the presentation of information, and more particularly to a method and apparatus for displaying information of a type stored as a digital record for subsequent display and/or reproduction. Various techniques have been employed to record the musical score of an instrumental solo artist on magnetic tape or the like as an aid in rehearsals and as a permanent record for playback during actual performance. While single album-length recordings were available initially, higher-density formats have permitted more music to be recorded on a given surface area. Additionally, some recording apparatus are capable of storing complete musical works. However, no practical technique has been available to provide an updated, "live" record of the artist's work. Some magnetic tape recordings were played back from a playback cassette, but the playing back was random, and no information was retained. Other techniques have employed an electronic cassette player for reading a prerecorded cassette which contains an annotated conductor's score. In one such apparatus, the cassette reads alphanumeric data in a guide track, but the operator must preprogram his tape player to skip to the desired location for viewing the music. Another apparatus utilizes a data track that can be scanned by light beams. Music can be played in response to the scanning. However, this apparatus must be hand-held, and does not store the prerecorded music as a permanent record. As a result of these problems, the performer must review his or her work before each performance. This can be a very stressful time since a performance is virtually a one-man or one-woman show. In order to review a task or a musical composition, a performer must often reread and study the composer's notation. While it is possible to memorize or "pre-read" the music in this manner, it is a fairly tedious process

Johnson Derezin Johnson Derezin (April 22, 1923 – December 1, 1994) was an American actor best known for his frequent role as the father of Jack Nicholson in the horror film series, The Shining. Life and career Derezin was born in Cleveland, Ohio. His mother was of German and Polish descent and his father, Manfred Derezin, was from Prussia, who had died two years before him. He was raised in the suburbs of Los Angeles. He was an alumnus of the University of Southern California, having graduated in 1943. He served as an aerial gunner in the United States Navy during World War II. After the war, he acted in minor roles in various B movie westerns. In The Shining, his character, Ben, is described as being forced off the bus and to check in at the Stanley Hotel by Jack Nicholson, who Nicholson was portraying in the film. In a 1980 interview, he admitted to being a room-service man at the hotel that night and said he had never met Jack Nicholson before. During the shooting of the scene, Nicholson gave Derezin the most famous line of the movie, "Here's Johnny!" Derezin stated that he was given the line when the scene was being photographed, with the line not being used during the actual filming. The line was later included in the film's end credits. Derezin was eventually cast in the movie
